Green Communities Canada Recognizes TGC with Resilience Award

Toronto Green Community has received the Organizational Resilience award in recognition of 17 years of hard work in the service of the environment and the City of Toronto.

"We're very impressed with the accomplishments of Toronto Green Community down through the years," said Clifford Maynes, of Green Communities Canada, a national organization which conferred the award at its recent Annual General Meeting. "We want to take this opportunity to congratulate Toronto Green Community and its community supporters for everything that's been achieved to date, and to wish them the best for the years to come."

Maynes noted that it is far from easy to maintain and grow an organization like Toronto Green Community, with its excellent programs and partnerships (see www.torontogreen.ca to learn more).

"It takes determination, entrepreneurship, and constant innovation," he said.

"Environmental sustainability is an urgent goal, but we're not going to get there overnight. We need people and organizations like Toronto Green Community that will keep working away -- through good times and difficult times."
